Inside this issue

Columbus Day

Campus Safety Tour 3

Making moves

Photos by Nick Nelson / Dakota Stude

Adjunct accounting professor Mike Hendrickson speaks to students in his Accounting 494 course Thursday afternoon in Gamble Hall.

Matt Eidson

Dakota Student

As the weather turns chilly, students across the University of North Dakota campus can be seen shoving their hands into their pockets and tucking their chins behind their collars. While the cold is a standard reminder that winter is coming, it also reminds Mike Hendrickson that it's time for the Truth and Reconciliation Project's 6th annual coat drive.

For more content visit www.dakotastudent.com

Hendrickson, the professor for Accounting 494: Ethics and Self Responsibility, leads the joint project between his class and American Indian Student Services (AISS). Many students from both organizations are involved with the Truth and Reconciliation Project.

Together, the organizations distribute collection boxes throughout Grand Forks in search of gently used or brand new, "coats, hooded sweatshirts, hats, scarves, gloves, children's items (including snowsuits), shoes and boots, and blankets," according to the flyers distributed around town. This year, all donations will be presented to the Spirit Lake Reservation.

Hendrickson, a self-described "vagabond," travels from his winter home in Palm Desert, California to UND every year for two months to teach his class. He believes in the importance of buildintercultural relationships between students of different backgrounds and upbringings. He says that in addition to bringing coats and other winter gear to Spirit Lake, students will also take part in a "cultural exchange," in which students from UND and representatives from the Spirit Lake Reservation will exchange small gifts.

As a soft-spoken man with a kind demeanor, the concern Hendrickson feels for issues like intercultural relationships comes through as he talks about the meaning of the Truth and Reconciliation Project: "(facing) up to some of the truths."

"We need to come together as people," Hendrickson said, "and that's what this project is about: how do you come together inter-culturally? What's our shared story?"

Hendrickson continues discussing the idea of a "shared story," going on to say that his "deal al-

Caitlyn Shoulder and Reid Taubenheim speak about their experiences in adjunct professor Mike Hendrickson's Accounting 494 course, which gathers coats and other winter accessories every year for families on the Spirit Lake Reservation.

ways has been that this is the rainbow nation, but we're not acting like it, especially right now."

Campus involvement

It's not just students in ethics and self responsibility class and AISS who are getting involved. Caitlyn Shoulder, an American Indian Studies major at UND, is also assisting with the project. As a member would want to come here (UND)."

Shoulder goes on to say that it's important potential students from reservations have that "base layout" in place for when they come to UND, "because coming off of a reservation or coming from a very small rural area into this setting, where you don't really know a lot of people, it's nice to have that comfort." This comfort Shoulder de-

"We need to come together as people, and that's what this project is about: how do you come together inter-culturally? What's our shared story?"

Mike Hendrickson, Adjunct accounting professor of the Lakota people, Shoulder's passion for the project is clear.

Shoulder says the importance of the coat drive goes beyond simply donating winter items to people in need. The drive also serves as a means to create relationships between current UND students and people living on the Spirit Lake Reservation. According to Shoulder, these relationships serve a very valuable purpose, "build(ing) that connection for a potential future student that scribes is partially established by UND students bringing the donations directly to the reservation. She says that, "being able to go and hand deliver them, you build that connection right there," so if the students choose to attend UND in the future, they're more likely to feel welcome on campus. According to Shoulder, while the coat and winter clothing dona-

Story continued on next page.

UND adjunct accounting professor Mike Hendrickson speaks about the beginnings of the annual coat drive, which distributes winter clothing and accessories to families on the Spirit Lake Reservation in Fort Totten, N.D.

What's the point of Columbus Day?

Aimee Coons Dakota Student

Columbus Day became a federal holiday in 1937 to commemorate his landing in the Americas on October 12, 1492. Columbus landed on various islands in the Bahamas and explored Central and South America. He never set foot on North America. In fact, Columbus was one of the last explorers of the Americas. Leif Eriksson landed on the North American continent 500 years before Columbus ever set sail. Columbus had little to no effect in settling what would become the United States.

There is no point in celebrating Columbus Day. All it has become for our society is a potential day off work or school and a day for stores to promote their products by offering good deals and sales. Columbus offers no cultural enhancement to our society and should no longer be observed. There are currently movements to change Columbus Day to Indigenous Peoples Day. Austin, Salt Lake City, Los Angeles and Seattle are just a few who have made this change. A large part of the debate to change Columbus

Day to Indigenous Peoples Day is Columbus' actions towards the native peoples of the areas he explored. Columbus, unfortunately, was truly a man of his time and viewed anyone who wasn't a white Christian as lower than himself. Columbus was not the only person to feel or act this way. About 20 years after Columbus, Hernàn Cortès, a Spanish conquistador and explorer, ravaged Mexico, destroying the Aztec Nation in the name of New Spain and God.

There is no dispute that Columbus treated the indigenous people terribly, bringing about slavery and starvation. However, this should not be the driving argument to change Columbus Day. After all, we celebrate Presidents Day which was originally established to commemorate President Washington. President Washington, along with at least 11 other presidents, owned slaves and contributed to the oppression and maltreatment of African Americans. Yet, we still celebrate Presidents Day, and view the Founding Fathers as saints. It's contradictory to say we should do away with Columbus Day because of the

Courtesy of Mark Lennihan / AP

In this Oct. 10, 2016, file photo, boys wave Italian flags while riding a float in the Columbus Day Parade in New York. A movement to abolish Columbus Day and replace it with Indigenous Peoples' Day has new momentum but the gesture to recognize victims of European colonialism has also prompted howls of outrage from some Italian Americans, who say eliminating their festival of ethnic pride is culturally injustice done to the indigenous people, when we still celebrate Presidents Day.

Columbus Day no longer brings any cultural value to our society. One can argue that it never brought any cultural value to our society because Columbus had no hand in settling what would become the United States. In place of Columbus Day, Indigenous Peoples Day should be celebrated. Celebrating Indigenous Peoples Day would give our society the opportunity to learn and celebrate Native Americans like never before.

A part of my childhood was spent living in Alaska. The state of Alaska greatly celebrates Native Alaskan tribes. It was mandatory in our school district to have a field trip once a year to what was commonly known as "The Alaska Room." This was a place for elementary school children to come and learn about some of the Native Alaskan tribes and their customs.

In high school, it is mandatory for students to take an Alaskan History course. This course covered some history of the Native Alaskans. Native Alaskan culture and history is highly celebrated and Alaska should be used as an example for other states to celebrate their local Native American tribes. Adopting Indigenous Peoples Day would be a fantastic start to celebrating a wonderful culture.

North Dakota is home to several Native American tribes, such as the Mandan, Hidatsa, Ari-admiration for his professor.

kara, Yankonia, Sisseton, Wahpeton, Hunkpapa, Dakotah, Lakotah, Pembina Chippewa, Cree and Metis, just to name a few.

These peoples should be celebrated, starting with the adoption of Indigenous Peoples Day. But, that should just be the start. Native American history should be taught in schools; their holidays should be observed and their languages should be learned. Respect for Indigenous Peoples is long overdue, and the start of the repayment should be with the adoption of Indigenous Peoples Day.

Aimee Coons is an opinion writer for Dakota Student. She can be reached at aimee.coons@ndus.edu

Continued from front.

tions serve basic needs for those living in Spirit Lake, the issues that need to be addressed go much deeper.

"The reservation's whole idea was not meant for it to be prosperous," Shoulder said. "It was meant for them to be stuck there and to die out eventually."

Shoulder listed one of several issues Native Americans on reservations face: "The ground, the soil, the land, it's not always fertile," Shoulder said. "It's not always beneficial for them to be productive."

Shoulder also points out the complications reservations face, where, "they don't actually own the land or they don't own parts of the land, so they can't mortgage it out for building or for building their economy, so there's a lot of factors that have really been pushing against trying to be a thriving and prosperous (...) nation."

Eye-opening experience

Reid Taubenheim is one of the many students who will be delivering the coats and other various donations to Spirit Lake. As a young Minneapolis, from Taubenheim describes the eye-opening experience the ethics and self responsibility sues many Native Americans face on reservations. He went on to say that, "once you start to talk to someone who actually is American Indian and knows" it becomes clear that "they have so many of these obstacles" that make many things difficult for them. Taubenheim exhibits the

"One of the most important lessons that we can give to different American Indians on different reservations is that we care, that's where we have to start, and we have to convince them that we care because history reflects something else." "

Mike Hendrickson, Adjunct accounting professor class provided him, remarking how he wasn't aware of, "the type of living conditions that people on the reservation were dealing with."

Before taking Hendrickson's class, Taubenheim said he'd never considered the is-same passion that both Shoulder and Hendrickson display when they discuss the coat drive. During his interview with the Dakota Student, Taubenheim routinely praises "Mr. Hendrickson," showing an obvious respect and Raising awareness

Though the issues many reservations face are plentiful, Hendrickson, Shoulder and Taubenheim are confident they can begin correcting the problems. Another step toward correcting the issues will take place Oct. 18 at 6:30 p.m., in the American Indian Student Center.

The fundraising event will have tickets available for entry, which can be purchased by either providing a winter clothing donation, or $5, which will be used to purchase more winter clothing.

The event will feature Leigh Jeanotte, former Director for American Indian Student Services, as a speaker, and will provide Indian tacos, traditional Native American food and refreshments.

According to Taubenheim, the event, hosted by the Truth and Reconciliation Project and AISS, serves a very important purpose.

"First you have to raise awareness," Taubenheim said, "which is what we're trying to do with our Truth and Reconciliation night, where we'll have Leigh come and speak and kind of just talk about things - help build awareness throughout the campus."

This awareness will assist in bringing light to the issues Hendrickson, Shoulder and Taubenheim wish to address But according to Hendrickson, the first step towards reconciliation is simple. "One of the most important lessons that we can give to different American Indians on different reservations is that we care, that's where we have to start," Hendrickson said. "And we have to convince them that we care because history reflects something else."

Matt Eidson is the Editor-in-Chief for Dakota Student. He can be reached at stewart.eidson@und.edu

SCHOOL OF MEDICINE & HEALTH SCIENCES UNIVERSITY OF NORTH DAKOTA DEPARTMENT OF SPORTS MEDICINE

777-4845

UND CENTER FOR SPORTS MEDICINE

Physical Therapy Specializing in: Orthopedic & Sports Injury Rehabilitation Manipulation & Dry Needling

LICENSED PHYSICAL THERAPISTS:

- CATHY ZIEGLER, PT, ATC, SCS
- JAKE THOMPSON, PT. ATC. CERT SMT. CERT DN

Classifieds

Help Wanted:

Personal Banker (Teller) - Grand Forks, ND Bank Forward in Grand Forks, ND has an opening for a full-time Personal Banker. Hours would be Monday-Friday between the hours of 8:00am-6:00pm, with rotating Saturday shifts.

Responsibilities include teller duties and paying functions; bookkeeping; cross selling banking products and services; responding to customer inquiries; and answering phones promptly and courteously. Past experience in bank or retail involving customer interaction and cash handling is preferred. High school diploma or GED required.

Help Wanted:

Part time position for local moving company. Must be an active, attentive, and friendly person. Apply in person, Kedney Moving Center located at stewart.eidson @und.edu News Editor Diane Newberry diane.newbery

THEDAKOTASTUDENT

EDITORIAL

Editor-in-chief Matt Eidson

@und.edu Opinion Editor Brendan McCabe

brendan.mccabe @und.edu

Features Editor Shelby Johnson

shelby.marie.johnson @und.edu Sports Editor

Allyson Bento allysonmarie.bento

@und.edu Photo Editor

Nick Nelson nicholasgnelson @gmail.com

Business Autumn Graber autumn.graber

@und.edu 701-777-2678

Graphic Design Heather Schuler and Shiny Mahlum heather.m.schuler

@und.edu rachel.mahlum @und.edu

The Dakota Stureserves copyright privilege for all stories written and published by the staff. Permission must be given by the Editor to reprint any article, cartoon, photograph thereof. The Dakota Student is a student-operated newspaper published by the university of North Dakota.

Opinions expressed in this publication are not necessarily those of UND or the administration, faculty, staff and student body of UND. The Dakota Student is published every Tuesday and Friday during the academic year except holidays,

during vacation breaks and exam periods. The Dakota Student is printed at Grand Forks Herald on PEFC Certified paper, ing soy-based inks. The Dakota Student welcomes feedback regardarticles ing photographs, and 4700 DeMers Ave. $16-$22 per hour, flexible schedules.

prints corrections for articles

ing factual errors.

Please send your resume to Bank Forward, Human Resources, PO Box 7070, Fargo, ND 58106 or email to humanresources@bankforward.com.

Our company is widely respected for its commitment to employees and offers a comprehensive benefit package.

FEATURES

Photos by Nick Nelson / Dakota Student

(Left) UND police chief Eric Plummer assigns routes to groups during the fall campus safety tour outside Chester Fritz Auditorium on Thursday night. (Right) UND police sergeant Jose Solis notes a burned out light during the fall campus safety tour.

Devon Abler

Dakota Student

Thursday night a group of community members joined the University Police Department for UND's annual fall campus safety tour. Students, faculty and community members were invited to come and join the UPD staff on their walk throughout campus. This provided participants with the opportunity to help UPD identify areas of campus that could be dangerous at night. An event that has been present on campus for a little more than 20 years, the Campus Safety Tour has evolved. Over the past four years, this tour tifying potentially dangerous areas on campus. "I've been here, next week it will be five years, and when I got here, the department went from identifying burnt out lights to idenof public safety took in the sidewalk, areas over the lighting tour," Police Chief Eric Plummer said. "We wanted ing and for any blue to recraft it into just light emergency sysmore than lights. Look- tems that were burnt ing at sidewalks, rail- out or not activated. ings, overgrown trees, bushes, things like tems are designed for that. Walking across campus and finding notice an emergency or areas that might make you cringe a little at of campus that would benefit from more light-

The blue light sysstudents to use if they experience one themselves. They simply night. We want people press the red button and UND campus safe is the department's top priority, the department also takes care of the Grand Forks community as a whole. Officer Ben, the golden retriever K9 unit for the department, and his handler Sergeant Jose Solis can be found assisting the Grand Forks Police department in identifying drugs or finding

"Spending an hour with a cop and being able to ask any question about the profession or about the law system opened my eyes to the work that they do to keep the community safe."

Devon Abler, Features writer to walk across campus confident in their safety and security."

Plummer handed out sections of the campus to the officers and other UND students and I each paired with an officer. We were ineyes open for burnt out lights, hazardous cracks the department will receive a call with the location of the blue light. Spending an hour with a cop and being able to ask any question about the profession or about the law system opened my eyes to the work structed to keep our that they do to keep the community safe. While keeping the missing persons. He also serves as a therapy dog. By having a K9 unit, the department has been able to deepen relationships with the students here at UND.

"Resident Council purchased Ben for us as a gift," Solis said. "Residence halls can also participate in the Adopt a Cop program where they adopt an officer for a semester and we come and get to know the students. I bring Ben along with me to visit the halls and get to know the students."

Maintaining strong relationships with the student's is a goal for UPD officers. These relationships have improved the views that students have of the police department. One of the students who joined the tour, Parker Combs, received the email in his mailbox and was intrigued by the event.

"I saw the email and thought it would be interesting to come and see what this event was about," Combs said. "This has definitely improved my relationship with the department. Spending an hour with an officer helped me see them as more than just police officers. I was also able to use their flashlights and it was one of the best things I have used in my life."

While the talk on campus might be how to avoid police officers, this department genuinely wants to know the student body and help students and the community.

"My door is always open," Plummer said. "Students can shoot me an email or come stop by. I have this alligator in my office that makes for a pretty good story."

If you have any questions or want to get involved with other events that the police department is hosting, take a look at the University of North Dakota Police Department Facebook page or find them on Twitter.

Devon Abler is a features writer for Dakota Student. She can be reached at devon.abler@und.edu

Dakota Student file photo

Kyle Kinnamon

Dakota Student

Transferring schools in college sports is not uncommon, but in college hockey it is done very rarely. For the University of North Dakota, this season there have been three transfers, two leaving the program (Chris Wilkie and Matej Tomek) and one coming into the program (Nick Jones). Prior to this last offseason, the last player who transferred to UND was Mitch MacMillan in the 2011-2012 season. MacMillan transferred from St. Cloud State, and pitched in defensively for the team. He never found a scoring touch, only scoring a total of 10 points in 39 games played at UND. The decision to transfer schools can be incredibly hard, and there are many reasons a player may decide to transfer schools. Junior forward Nick Jones knew he needed a change of scenery.

"It was my sophomore year, and I felt I was not developing at the rate I wanted to," Jones said. "I just wasn't enjoying myself there as much as I had been in the past. I thought I was still in a situation where I could go back to juniors, and find a new place that fit better."

When it came to the decision to transfer away from UND, Tomek knew he must in order to progress his game.

"The decision about leaving UND was very tough," Tomek said. "But it ultimately came down to the opportunity of playing time. I believe this way I will be able to get more opportunity this year and reach my goals going forward." While the decision to leave UND was for his betterment of his game, Tomek admits he will miss UND. "First and foremost, my teammates and the atmosphere of packed Ralph on Saturday nights," Tomek said.

"But of course, also all of my friends outside of hockey team." leaving a Players team can have repercussions the locker room. While

You can also search for available apartments at www.GOLDMARK.com the locker room is different, players understand the circumstances at the end of the day.

Senior forward and UND hockey captain Austin Poganski drives the puck past the blue line at the Ralph Engelstad Arena against Minnesota Duluth last season.

"You never want to lose one of your teammates, one of you family members, to another team," captain Austin Poganski said. "At the end of the day, coach is trying to bring in the guys that will help our team win another National Championship. I think maybe those guys (Wilkie and Tomek) did not have the right mindset or were not pushing our other guys to their best limits. I think as a coaching standpoint you want to have the guys, who are in the lineup or who aren't in the lineup, who will be the best teammates."

Success does not come easy to players, let alone if the player is transferring into an already established team, basically becoming a "freshman" again. They have to learn new systems, new teammates and develop chemistry with teammates and staff.

"It is a little weird comthroughout ing in as a junior," Jones said. "I went through this being a freshman, but coming in as a junior, you only have two years here, but at the same time this is your first year, so you have to adapt a little quicker than I did as a freshman."

Switching schools can be hard on a player, not only on the ice, but adjusting to the new community as well. For Jones, this has not been an issue.

"I like UND a lot," Jones said. "Especially being around the rink, with the tradition, and the pursuit of excellence here is second to none."

Jones is feeling at home at UND. He can attribute that to his teammates. Jones' teammates have welcomed him in with open arms, and treated him as any other teammate, giving him a lot of grief and making jokes with him.

Jones adds much needed depth to the UND hockey program. He believes his smart defensive style of play will benefit the team as they attempt to win yet another National Championship. Jones said. "I think I compete hard at both ends of the rink, good on the faceoff dot, and hopefully provide a little bit of offense as well."

Jones' captain approves of what he has been able to do for the team so far this season.

"He's (Jones) taken on a big role already on the team," Poganski said. "He brings his work shoes and work bucket to the rink every day."

UND hopes their moves this offseason helps regain the play and chemistry of the Champion-National ship team of two years past to propel them to yet another National Championship for this historic program.

Kyle Kinnamon is a sports writer for Dakota Student. He can be reached at kyle.kinnamon@und.edu

Child Sex-trafficking Panel Baker Court Room at the Law School

> October 20, 2017 3pm - 6pm

Free Admittance (Donations welcomed to support the National Center for Missing & Exploited Children)

Following the Panel will be a reception including light food and drink for more information contact Kate Drechsel katedrechsel@gmail.com

